

Describe someone who is talkative

You should say

Who this person is

How you know this person

What this person likes to talk about

How you feel about this person

Well, my roommate is a kind of person who can talk nonstop. You never need to worry about running out of topics when you talk to him. He is always ready to offer his ideas and anecdotes.

We met at university. He was a member of the student union. We often organized parties and activities together and gradually we got to know each other better.

He can talk about everything and he especially likes to discuss history, because he is very interested in it and he is taking history as his minor. He is kind of like an expert on history. Once he delivered a lecture to our first-year students in the university, which was really impressive.

I think he is a particularly knowledgeable and interesting person. He has good memories of various historical events and characters, sometimes he can even give some unique insights in a humorous way, so that listeners are able to think about history from quite a different angle.

Should children be encouraged to talk more?

I think it depends. For outgoing children, we can encourage them to express themselves more efficiently. When it comes to introverted children we can guide them to talk but we should not force them if they don't want to.

其他观点

I think whether we should encourage them to talk or not depends on each children's personality and the actual situation. Some children actually talk too much, which is not good. However, we should always encourage them to learn some basic communication skills.

Are most Chinese people talkative?

Personally, I think most Chinese people are relatively reserved, so they are not very talkative, compared to most of the westerners. It is related to our traditional culture.

其他观点

Chinese people generally are kind of quiet. But sometimes they have to be talkative in their work. For example, a salesperson has to be talkative in order to close a deal. And I do think people are more outgoing and talkative than before.

Are you talkative?

I'm not a very talkative person, to be honest. I'm usually the listener in a conversation, but I'm a good one. I can give the talker positive responses and helpful feedback.

其他观点

Generally speaking, I'm a quiet person who doesn't talk much. I mean, I prefer to be a listener and state my opinions only when it's necessary.

What communication skills are important?

I think maintaining a good eye contact is very important in communication. It can show the others that you are genuine and you paying attention. So, they can also know that you care about what they say.

其他观点

I think necessary body language and facial expressions are important. People with a poker face will make any conversation very dull. On the contrary, appropriate gestures and facial expressions will make it a lot livelier.

What jobs need employees to be talkative?

I think a salesperson needs to be talkative so that he can give good descriptions about the products and they are better able to cope with all the questions from their potential customers. So, being talkative is essential.

其他观点

A salesperson has to be talkative in order to create a friendly vibe and establish a closer relationship with the customers, which is helpful in closing a deal. The same goes to teachers, who convey knowledge mostly through oral communication.
