

Describe something given to you that you really need

What it is

Who gave it to you

Why you need it

And how you felt about it

Yesterday, I had to look for someone to give me a copy of their notes from last week's chemistry lecture.

Many of my friends said that they didn't take notes. Unexpectedly, a guy named Peter, who I'm not that close with, was kind enough to give me a copy of his. Peter isn't my classmate in chemistry, but he had the same lecture that morning. It was very nice of him. He's also my classmate in two other subjects.

I needed the notes for exam preparation. I didn't attend that class, because I had a horrible headache, so I had to go home early. Because of that, I missed the chemistry lecture. Our exams are around next week. Without the notes, I'm not that confident to get a good score.

I was relieved to see exactly what was discussed in that class because of Peter's notes. I was very thankful that I didn't have to read the whole chemistry chapter to make my own notes. Peter's notes were organized and easy to understand. I was surprised to see he had beautiful penmanship.

What should parents do when their children ask for things their friends have?

When children ask their parents for something, I believe it should be treated on a case-by-case basis. For example, if it's something that would have a positive impact on the child's life, I think they should agree. Otherwise, I think they should hold their ground.

I think parents should teach their children about money's worth. For example, when I was a child, my parents wouldn't let me ask for gifts over a certain amount. This only let me ask for things I really wanted and taught me what "expensive" meant.

Is consumption important to a country?

I believe consumption is important. This is what drives the economy. So in my opinion it's crucial that people buy from local stores. For example, in my town many stores have closed due to competitors from other countries with an online presence.

其他观点

In my opinion, there is a fine line between consuming too much and not enough. I think that a country with too much consumption will have to deal with increased waste issues. I believe striking a balance between the economy and the environment is what works best.

Why do people buy things that are not necessary?

There's a lot of pressure that comes from marketing, so I believe many people buy things that they don't need because of it. For example, sometimes I see well-written ads online that pressure me to buy something. It can be hard to resist.

其他观点

I see a lot of people around me buy things just because they were cheap, or on sale! I believe it becomes a form of thrill. They momentarily feel like they "won" by buying something at a low price, but I don't share that mentality.

What things do young people like to buy?

In my opinion, young people like to hang out with their friends, so they spend money on social activities, such as going to the restaurant, movies, etc. I also put aside some money in my budget to buy meals for when I'm going out with friends.

其他观点

I believe that young people care about electronics, so they spend their money on new gadgets. For example, a friend of mine absolutely needs to own the latest phone released by his favorite brand. Personally, I think it's a bit of a waste.
