
Describe an important decision made with the help of other people

You should say:

When it happened

Who helped you to make the decision

What the decision was

And how you felt about it

I had to make a tough decision earlier this year. It was around May.

I asked for help from my older brother, some of my friends, and my cousin. It sounds like a lot of people, but it was important to get different opinions. They all knew a lot about technology and gadgets.

I had to decide on what kind of laptop to get. I needed one that could handle the software I would be using. There were many choices, so I felt very overwhelmed. Luckily for me, that list was narrowed down with the help these people. They helped me make comparisons. Though I changed my mind several times, I finally settled on one laptop. I decided to buy a Dell Inspiron Gaming Laptop.

I was very satisfied with the decision. It was great to see how smoothly my new laptop could handle the programs I needed to use. It was a relief to know that my savings weren't wasted on the wrong laptop, so I was really grateful.

Who will be helpful when making decision in your country?

Usually parents are willing to offer their opinions to their children based on their experiences. At school, students can also turn to their teachers for help. Friends can give good advice, too.

It must be the parents. Take myself as an example, I value my parents' opinions and they know what's best for me. They know what I'm capable of and how I think. In my opinion, this is incredibly important as I know that they understand me and only want to support me.

Do you think it is advisable listening to others' advice when making decision?

I think most of the time, others' advice can be very helpful, because it offers you a point of reference, especially when you have to clue at all. But sometimes, it's up to ourselves to make the decision, and people's suggestions can distract us.

其他观点

Yes incredibly. I think that it's very important to hear other sides of an argument and get an understanding of the full picture before making a decision. I wouldn't make a decision without considering other points of view or other people's input.

Who is more likely to make bad decisions, men or women?

In my opinion, women are most likely to make bad decisions. I believe that women mostly make decisions based on their emotions, and this can play tricks on them. I think it's best to think things through rather than listening to one's emotions.

其他观点

I think that men are most likely to make bad decisions. I have witnessed men around me make impulsive decisions, on the spur of the moment. I personally believe that women may be a bit more prudent when it comes to decision-making.

When young people are to make a decision, should they listen to some advice?

I think they should. Young people usually don't have a lot of experiences in life. And many situations and decisions are new to them. So instead of impulsively making decisions on their own, they can ask the opinions from their parents, teachers or other more experienced people.

其他观点

I think yes, because it could change their opinion once they are more educated on the subject, therefore listening to more than one opinion is a wise idea. If they didn't listen, I think that people would make a lot more avoidable mistakes.

Should we trust the advice given by strangers for making decisions?

Trusting the advice of strangers' depends on the situation. For example, I once needed to take a train and there were no signs or directions. A stranger asked me where I was headed and told me where to wait to catch the good train. The advice was very helpful.

其他观点

From my point in view, trusting the advice of strangers is out of the question. There's no way for me to know if they're ill-intended or if they're telling the truth. I'd rather wait for an opportunity to get information from a reliable source.
