

Describe a game that you played in your childhood

You should say

What the game was

When you played it

Who you played it with

How you felt about the game

During my childhood, one of the games I enjoyed playing was dodgeball. Though we didn't really use a ball. What we used was more like a handful of rubber bands tied together.

I played it a lot at school, during lunch breaks, snack time, and at the end of the day after class as well.

I played dodgeball with my classmates, who were also my friends. Sometimes, students from other classes would join in too. That was okay because we needed two teams to really enjoy the game. When upperclassmen played too, our class would sometimes form a team to play against them. It was fun when we mixed players from different classes too.

Whenever I think about the game, I get nostalgic. As a child, it gave me an adrenaline rush to run and try to avoid getting hit by the ball. It was funny, though sometimes painful, to trip while trying to dodge or duck. It always made me giddy when I was able to hit someone with the ball.

Why do people play different kinds of games after they grow up?

I believe a reason why people play different games when they grow up is for social acceptance. When I was a teenager, it was very important to me not to come across as childish. So, I think people want to look grownup.

In my opinion, it's because people grow bored with them. For example, I played hide and seek with a friend's child the other day and soon got tired of it. I believe that as we grow up, it's part of human nature to seek more of a challenge.

What kinds of games do children play these days?

In my opinion, it depends on how old they are. For example, the other day I was little kids play tag in the park, it's a timeless classic. But I noticed that older kids like to play more sports-like games.

It seems to me that today's children are all about electronics. Just the other day, I saw a kid borrow his mon's cellphone to play games while waiting in line. I believe many kids prefer playing video games to playing other types of games.

Do parents in your country encourage children to play games?

In general, I believe that parents in my country encourage their kids to go out, have fun and play with their friends. I know that people are aware that a sedentary lifestyle is bad. I often see kids playing on the street where I live.

sadly, I don't believe that parents in my country encourage their children to play games. What I witness is that they are so busy they don't really care about what their children do. I find it sad because playing games is important to a child's development.

Do you think winning is the most important goal for playing games?

In my opinion, there's no point to playing games if my mind isn't set o win. The feeling of winning is very pleasant, it feels to me like a burst of energy. I'm not a sore loser, but I appreciate being on the winning team.

From my perspective, focusing on winning takes away the point of playing games. I want to play games to have fun, relax and enjoy myself. If winning is my only goal, I will feel disappointed and it's going to ruin the experience.
