Why it is important

The coconut tree is an important plant in my country. I see it mostly when I got to the beach. There are many coconut trees that grow along the shoreline. It's not only at the beach that I see them, many warm and tropical areas in my country have coconut trees.

Coconut trees are quite tall. They have greyish tree trunks. They look like they're made out of stacked rings. It is bare of any branches and leaves until you reach the top. There, the leaves branch out from long, flat, stems. The leaves of the coconut tree are long and thin, ending in a point. You can also find several bunches of coconuts growing among the leaves, close to the end of the trunk.

This plant is very important in southern China because coconuts are sold to the other parts of China. Aside from its sweet juice, you can also enjoy the flesh inside the fruit. Some locals even use coconut lumber to build their houses, which makes the plant more special.

How do schools teach students to grow plants?

Some schools teach students how to grow plants by entrusting each group of students with a plant, teachers then encourage the students to get involved in caring for the plant. This method also raises students' sense of responsibility.

Schools teach students how to grow plants by getting them involved in school trips where they can visit areas of the community that engage in wildlife and plant protecting. This gives them a little insight into how they can grow plants themselves and even look after ones they have at home.

Do old people grow plants?

Old people do grow plants. It gives them an opportunity to be outside to enjoy the colours and the planting. It is something that is not so vigorous, and they can take their time doing so.

其他观点

I think old people don't like to grow plants because of the time that it takes to grow and the amount of work that is involved, which they may not necessarily have. The effort which needs to be included can also take a toll on their bodies.

What is the main plant in your country?

I'm not an expert on plants, so I guess the main plant in the country I live in is pine trees. You can see them in both northern and southern China. They are important in the furniture manufacturing business.

I suppose the main plant may be the lavender. It is popular and you often see a wide range of products made from lavender in shops. The smell is absolutely wonderful, which helps people relax. And many girls appreciate it very much as it's been associated with romance.

Do people in your country like to grow plants at home?

I think many people in my country love to grow plants at home! It gives them a peaceful setting and they love the greenery. Some of them love to grow plants that they can add to their cooking, like some vegetables.

其他观点

Some people in my country hate to grow plants at home because they believe that plants belong outside. It only invites insects and bugs inside the house and if a person is not careful - he or she may run the risk of bringing a poisonous plant into the house, which could be life-threatening for family members.
