
Describe someone you haven't seen before but you would like to know more

You should say:

Who this person is

How you knew about the person

What you want to know more about this person

Why you would like to know this person more

I've never seen or met her yet, but I'd like to know more about my grandfather's architect friend.

I got to know about this person when my mother and father decided to have a summer house built. They wanted a talented architect to make the design. My grandfather recommended his friend, whose name is Anna.

I want to know where she went to school and studied architecture. If I'm lucky, maybe I would even get to know her mentor as well. Anna could give me some tips to make a good design. Maybe she'd even tell me where she gets her inspiration. Besides, I'd like to know what type of architecture she bases her designs on.

I would like to get to know Anna more because I'm studying to become an architect, too. She may be retired, but I think she did great work with my family's summer house. In the future, when I become a professional architect, I would like to design beautiful and unique buildings like her.

Do you prefer to expand your social circle or be friends with a small group of people?

I favor quality over quantity, so for me being friends with fewer people is more in line with what I value. Not having too many friends lets me know each of them on a deeper level. In my opinion, this makes durable friendships.

I think that the more people I know, the better. For instance, if I need help with something, it would be great to know someone who's just right for the job. Having more friends also means it's easier to find someone to go on a trip with.

What kinds of people do you like to be friends with?

I want my friends to share common interests with me. For example, I like when my friends are into the same music, video games, movies, etc. as I am. Then, when we hang out, we have plenty of topics to talk about.

其他观点

I prefer to surround myself with friends that are better than me at something. They become rivals of sorts, which motivates me to push myself harder and improve. I believe that friends like that are very inspiring and help me become a better person.
