Describe a time that you looked for information from the Internet

You should say

When it happened

What you were looking for

Where you were searching on the internet

And how you felt about the information

It was sometime last week. I was having breakfast with my family. I'm not sure how we got to the topic, but we started talking about dogs.

I told my brother about Chihuahuas being the most aggressive dog breed. My mother heard what I said. She argued that my statement couldn't be true. Even my sister shook her head, saying that Pitbulls had to be the most aggressive.

So, to find out the real answer, I pulled out my mobile phone and opened a Google search. Typing "most aggressive dog breed" in the search bar, I clicked the first link in the results. It opened a 2018 article about the 10 Most Aggressive Dog Breeds. I felt like I won a prize when I saw the list. I was elated to see the number one on the list was "Chihuahua".

I couldn't wait to show it to my family. It made me laugh when I saw the disbelief on my sister's face. The top 10 list didn't even mention Pitbulls.

What are the differences between getting information from library and getting information from newspaper?

I think compared to the information in the library, the information in the newspaper is more up-to-date since papers are published daily. Besides, if I want to read more on a particular topic, articles on the newspaper will typically mention the source of the information, so I can look it up.

Getting information from the library is more reliable. Books are better-researched than newspapers, so I believe that the information they contain is more trustworthy. Unlike a newspaper article, information in the books is less likely to be distorted by the personal views of its author.

In what ways can people get information these days?

In my opinion, technology is the obvious answer. Everyone owns either a cell phone or tablet, so even if I don't have mine on me I can always ask someone to help me find the information I'm looking for. I think it's quick, easy and convenient.

其他观点

I believe that technology is overrated. I enjoy flipping through magazines and looking through magazines and looking up information in traditional books. Besides, I like the information on paper which doesn't depend on batteries. So, it is easy to access and reliable
